Vote in German Elections a Sign of Beaction That Pervades Europe-Would Have Been Greater Had Issues Not Been Mixed-Catholie Party Strong.

Special Cable Despatch to TRE SUN. BERLIN, Jan. 26 .- The final results of the elections are as follows: Two hundred and thirty-seven candidates have been definitely elected. In 160 constituencies second ballots will be necessary.

The successful candidates comprise 41 Conservatives, 10 Imperialists, 18 Poles, 89 Centrists, 29 National Liberals, 6 Radical People's party, 1 Radical Union party, 29 Socialists, 1 Middle Classes Association, Dane, 10 Independent Alsarian Centrists, Reform party, 2 Landswners' Union, Economic Union, and 2 German People's party.

Second ballots are necessary in the case † 29 Conservatives, 19 Imperialists, 5 Poles, 20 Centrists, 58 National Libera s, 27 Radical Peo, le's party, 12 Radical Union, 92 Social-Middle Classes Association, 3 Independer Liberals, 4 (Auelphs, 4 Independents, 3 Anti-Se mites, 8 Laundowners' Union, 12 Economic Unionwand 11 German People's

It would he a mistake to estimate the result of the elections so far as known as a day kne victory for the Government. One point only is clear, namely, that social smahast eceived a sharp check. The reaction against spcialistic ideas which is spreading whoughout Europe, and especially England, has developed unexpected strength in Germany and it would have manifested itself still none (Mearly had the issue been directly before the people. As a matter of fact, socialism has been helped instead of hindered in the dampaign by the complication of the issued before the electorate. Many supported the a socialistic candidates who desired merely to express their opposition to the autocastic tendencies of the Government and who were unwilling to vote for the Catholic Centre.

On the other hand, the result of the poth shows that the Centre party itself actually increased its strength slightly. It was this rarty which defeated the Government in the last Reichstag and caused its dissolution. The Kaiser and Chancellor von Buelow can therefore find scant vindication in seeing it returned in full strength and prepared to insist on the rights of the Legislature to control national expenditure.

The result so far as reached on the first hallot is to weaken the opposition by a net loss of twenty-five seats. It is not safe, according to the present outlook, to anticipate further Government gains on the second ballot; in fact, the advantage may even diminish. Even if the Government gains another half dozen seats from the Socialists, which is the most that any one considers possible, its control of the new Reichstagi is not by any means assured.

It can command a majority only by making new deals with some of the small parties which will hold the balance of power that heterogeneous body. This will be far from easy and will require substantial political concessions, but the luminous fact of the moment is that socialism has received a staggefing blow in Germany, and great is the rejoicing by the Emperor and all his followers. The greatest menace to his ambitions and to his crown itself has been checked. He has felt for the last few years that the chief danger to his plans in world politics lay in the growth of the socialistic tendencies of his own empire Now he will probably consider that he has a free hand once more, and the world at large is, therefore, likely to feel the effect of the German elections.

The results of the election, so far as known, were submitted to the Kaiser while he was at breakfast, after which he visited Chancellor von Buelow, and they held a long deliberation. The results, which are now complete except as regards ten districts, show even more clearly than hitherto the extent of the Social Democratic defeat.

The Social Democrats have definitely lost twenty-six seats, as compared with the result of the first ballots in 1903 At the second ballots on February 2 they will compete in ninety-two constituencies, as compared with 117 in 1903. The probable result will be that they will appear in the new Reichstag not seventy-nine strong. as before, but with fewer than fifty votes.

An important feature of these first ballots is that the Centre has not lost a single seat es compared with the first ballots of 1963, nor is it likely to lose any seat at the second bellot. Consequently it will remain just es powerful a factor to be reckoned with by the Government.

The one independent member elected is Prince Ernest von Hohenlohe, who belongs to no particular party. He successfully contested Gotha against Bock, a Social Democratic shoemaker.

The report that the Socialists gained a victory at Metz is not true. In Saxony, which was swept by the Socialists in 1903, their discomfiture is complete. They have retained Tetlow, Niederbarnin, Lubeck and Hamburg, and have lost Sonneberg, Rudoifstadt and Magdeburg.

The semi-official North German Gazette

prints in a conspicuous position the details of an incident, in which a body of electors who were attempting to show before the palace of the Crown Prince patriotic delight at the triumph of national sentiments were driven off by the police as they were about to sing a song. It is said that the police used drawn swords to disperse the crowd.

The Chancellor and Minister of the Interior both condemn the action of the police, while the latter, at the request of the Kaiser, has opened an immediate inquiry. The chief of the Berlin police denies the charge that awords were used. He says the electors were not allowed to demonstrate before the Schloss, so that the Kaiser's sleep would not be disturbed. The North German Gazette, commenting upon the elections, says that the judgment of the people has pronounced against the Social Democracy. The German people have shown that they will not allow national honor, the development of national strength and the future of the empire to be jeopardized. Redoubled efforts, it adds, are necessary on the second ballots, as it is important to demonstrate both at home and abroad that the German people when ques-tions of national import are at stake will sweep away anything that stands in the nallest weakening of the national strength Paris, Jan. 27.—None of the French papers has as yet made any comment on the result of the German elections. M. Jaures, in the Humanité, thinks it is a reaction after the 1903 successes. A secon-dary cause for the Government success was the extra number of bourgeois who voted.

The Petite République also gives the latter reason at the cause of the result, in addition to the divisions among the Socialists.

ENGLAND SEES YELLOW PERIL. "Spectator" Thinks Races Should Keep Apast-Trouble if War, Came.

Special Cable Despatch to TRE SUN.
LONDON, Jan. 26.—The yellow peril, or more 'partapularly, racial prejudice ag gravated by the immigration of Chines and Japanese to the western world, continues to be discussed prominently by the serious press. The Spectator to-day takes rather alar mist view and argues that the white Powers should speedily seek a definite understanding on the subject with China and Jarma. It says, after reviewing the California situation:

"The trouble has only just commend but it may rapatly become serious. The yellow peoples are very proud and very ensitive. They do not acknowledge, as for example the negroes have hitherto done. that there is any inherent inequality between themselves and white men, and not acknowledging it, the weight of argument is entirely on their side. They do not even understand why their intrusion is disliked and they see their way to reprisals which might in certain contingencies, as for instance a great European war, develop into active hostilities.

"The subject should therefore be dealt with before the Governments have caught fire and while the classes in both sets of countries are prepared to listen to reasonable arguments. These arguments should, we think, be based upon the assumption that the races will for the present at all events do well to keep apart. Their instinctive hostility, or shall we say jealousy, may and probably will gradually die away but it has lasted for ages and has become in the course of those ages one of the fixed conditions of thought and feeling among the masses, making a just equality of treatment for the moment nearly impossible."

Special Cade Despatch to THE SON. CONSTANTINOP ... Jan. 26 .- Recent statistics of Bulgarian a migration from the Turkish vilayet of Monastir, Macedonia, show that since the rewolf of 1903 nearly 30,000 men have emigrated from that place, which is 10 per cent, of the entire ablebodied male population. Nearly all of the emigrants are field laborers whose ages are between 20 and 40. Their destination has invariably been America, two-thirds going to the United States and the balance to South Almerica.

Specialit able Despatch to THE SUN. BELPAST, Insland, Jan. 26.-The labor conference heme, after rejecting the motion to amend the constitution in a manner which would have transformed it into an avowedly socialistic organization, agreed, without andivision, to a motion reasserting that the lack of employment of working, men was due to the private ownership of land and capital, and declaring the necessity of immediately empowering local authorities to acquire land and to engage in any trade or industry deemed desirable.

The resolution also urged the necessity of providing work for as many of the unemployed as possible by reducing the hours of labor to forty eight weekly. A resolution in favor of equal voting rights for men and women was a so adopted.

another employee is missing, and to-night the firemen and volunteers were at work searching for his body.

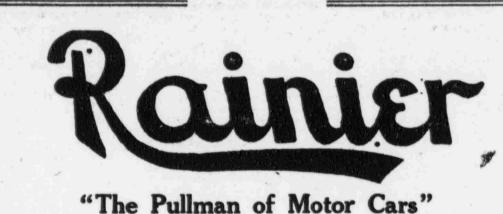

Five employees were seriously injured and are in the hospital with broken limbs and sprains. Most of these got their hurts by jumping from the windows of the building. One fell to the ground when sliding down a rope to safety. A number of others sustained minor injuries. The property loss will probably be at least $600,000.

The building, which was a brick structure five stories high with a large ell added, is completely ruined. All of the machinery on the three upper floors was rendered worthless except as sorap iron, while that on the two lower floors was damaged greatly by smoke, heat and water. All the cotton in presses of the manufactory was destroyed. At a late hour to-night the fire was still eating itself down into the building and it is itself down into the building and it is thought that it will be several days before the smouldering debris can be completely

The exact cause of the fire has not been determined, but it is believed that it was due to the slipping of the main belt in the ell. The resultant friction caused a shower of sparks to fly forth and this caused some of the loose cotton to ignite.
